

WHU Future Business Scholarship

In a globalized and rapidly evolving business environment, successful leadership requires more than strong analytical skills or academic excellence. It demands the ability to navigate diverse cultural contexts, act with a clear sense of purpose, and remain resilient in the face of challenges. Beyond my academic and professional experience, I am also committed to creating impact through my engagement at peca e.V., where I contribute to improving access to economic and political education, particularly for individuals from less privileged backgrounds. This combination of global exposure, purpose-driven ambition, and personal resilience has shaped my aspiration to become a successful global leader.

The first reason lies in my international perspective and my ability to adapt to different cultural and professional environments. During my studies, I spent a semester in Australia and another in the Czech Republic, both of which significantly broadened my perspective. In particular, my time in Australia showed me how much individuals and organizations benefit from the exchange of ideas across cultures and industries. Engaging with people from diverse cultural and professional backgrounds allowed me to continuously challenge my assumptions and gain new perspectives. I realized that effective decision-making improves significantly when it is shaped by diverse viewpoints rather than a single perspective. These experiences, combined with my work in international teams at Bosch and in consulting, have taught me that leadership is not about applying one universal approach, but about actively leveraging diversity to make better, more informed decisions. I am confident that this ability will be a key asset in leading in global business environments.

The second reason is my clear sense of purpose, as I am aiming towards contributing to the profound transformation, that is currently ongoing in the global automotive industry. Through my bachelor's degree in Automotive and Mobility Business, I have built a strong foundation in understanding the structure, challenges, and dynamics of the automotive sector. This academic background, combined with my practical experience in supply chain management at Bosch, financial controlling, and automotive consulting, has given me valuable insights into an industry undergoing profound change. Electrification, digitalization, and data-driven ecosystems such as Catena-X are fundamentally reshaping how companies operate and collaborate. These experiences have strengthened my ambition to actively contribute to this transformation. I do not only aspire to deepen my expertise, but also to take the next step towards leadership and actively shape the future of global mobility. The MSc in International Business at WHU represents the ideal opportunity to complement my strong industry foundation with the leadership, strategic, and international capabilities required to drive meaningful change. I am particularly motivated to combine my existing knowledge with advanced leadership skills in order to contribute to making the automotive industry more sustainable, innovative, and globally competitive.

The third reason is rooted in my leadership experience and resilience, which I developed through competitive sports and personal setbacks. For many years, ice hockey was a central part of my life, shaping my mindset, discipline, and approach to teamwork. Competing at a high level taught me how to operate effectively within a team, how to manage conflicts, and how to contribute to a strong team dynamic where every individual can perform at their best. However, this path came to an abrupt end due to several injuries, forcing me to stop playing. This moment was a significant personal setback, as it challenged not only my daily routine but also my identity. Over time, I learned to overcome this phase, rebuild my motivation, and redirect my focus towards new goals. This experience taught me that leadership is not defined by constant success, but by resilience, self-reflection, and the ability to move forward stronger after setbacks. I am convinced that these qualities will enable me to lead teams with empathy, determination, and a strong sense of responsibility.

The MSc in International Business at WHU provides the ideal platform to further develop and strengthen these capabilities. Its strong international orientation, diverse student body, and emphasis on collaborative learning will allow me to deepen my global perspective and continue learning from others. At the same time, the program will enable me to further develop my leadership potential and translate my experiences into impactful decision-making in an international context. I am particularly motivated to contribute to the WHU community and network by bringing in my international experiences, my clear industry focus, and my team-oriented mindset.

In conclusion, I believe that my international adaptability, my strong purpose in shaping the future of the automotive industry, and my resilience developed through both success and setbacks form a solid foundation for becoming a successful global leader. The MSc in International Business at WHU will not only help me further develop these qualities, but also provide me with the environment and opportunities to translate them into meaningful impact.
