Throughout my life, I have learned that growth often begins with listening. Empathy towards others and openness towards new experiences have consistently shaped how I navigate challenges and pursue opportunities. I genuinely care about the people around me and try to be someone others can rely on. My family and friends know that they can come to me with their concerns, and I will listen carefully and support them wherever I can. At the same time, I actively seek new environments and challenges. Whether through my semesters abroad or by stepping into unfamiliar academic and professional environments, I embrace uncertainty with curiosity rather than fear. Furthermore, ambition is a defining part of my character too. I pursue personal and professional goals with determination and discipline. This mindset was strongly shaped by my years in competitive youth ice hockey. As part of the academy team of the Krefeld Pinguine, I was able to win several competitions. These experiences shaped who I am today, and I could build up commitment, perseverance, and understand the importance of teamwork. Especially, teamwork strongly defines me. I do not see myself as a lone performer, as I really value collaboration and believe that strong team dynamics significantly enhance performance and growth. However, the most formative experience in my life, was the end of my sports career. Due to several injuries and performance setbacks, I had to let go of a path that had defined my identity for years. The transition back to focusing on academics was challenging and initially reflected in weaker academic results towards my final years in school. Over time, I was able to rediscover my direction by finding my interest in business and the automotive industry. The discipline and resilience I had built up in sports became valuable assets in my academic journey. At the same time, I am aware that I tend to place high expectations on myself. My strong internal drive can create unnecessary pressure, that weakens me more than it strengthens me. However, I increasingly view this as an area for growth, learning to balance ambition with perspective and self-awareness.

Please elaborate on your short- and long-term career goals and how ESMT's Master's program will help you to achieve these. Max. 150 Wörter

My short-term goal is to enter strategy consulting with a focus on the automotive industry. As Europe's automotive industry undergoes a profound transformation, I want to contribute to shaping its transition towards a sustainable and innovative ecosystem. ESMT's focus on connecting academic excellence with practical experience makes it the ideal environment to pursue this goal. Courses like "Fundamentals and Applications of AI" will deepen my understanding of how emerging technologies reshape industries, while the practice-oriented curriculum will provide me with hands-on experience I strongly value. Collaborating with ESMT's international students will allow me to gain the global perspective necessary to understand today's evolving markets. Furthermore, I aim to contribute to student initiatives such as the ESMT Consulting Club, connecting academic insights with real-world business challenges. In the long term I aspire to shape the strategy of globally operating automotive companies and drive the sustainable transformation of the global mobility sector.
