Application letter Student Ambassador

Dear Mr. Langeland,

Before visiting the Norwegian School of Economics (NHH) on 2 May, I must admit that I considered it merely as a backup option. However, my experience on campus, particularly the tour and lunch offered by the Ambassador Team, completely changed my perception. Speaking with Marianne Hoffmann, an ambassador, transformed NHH from a backup into my first choice. This encounter highlighted the vital role ambassadors play in representing the school - not only through information but through genuine human connection. Inspired by this, I wish to contribute to the team and share my story with prospective students who may be in the same position I was.

My personal development has been shaped by various experiences. I began learning the piano at the age of six, initially without enthusiasm. Over time, I recognised how such an early start fostered creativity and problem-solving, skills that were later appreciated by my teachers. During Year 6, I joined the Sprecher AG (student organisation committee), which strengthened my desire to contribute actively to my community. Since then, I have become increasingly motivated to create positive change, both in general society and within student organisations. In December 2020, I moved to the United Kingdom for half a year. This period abroad proved invaluable: I not only improved my English to a high level but also developed a deeper appreciation of cultural exchange. Today, I continue to embrace opportunities to learn from different societies while travelling, and I believe this mindset would be an asset to the Student Ambassador Team.

Equally, I have gained practical skills relevant to this position. Besides, I like the inclusive atmosphere which is created at NHH. Particularly for internationals like me. Courses like NOR10 and Human Rights in Business enrich the learning environment on the campus. Through my work as a waiter, I learned to remain calm and communicative under pressure, qualities that have helped me become an effective team player. Friends often appreciate my ability to stay composed and approachable in stressful situations. I would like to apply my communication skills at various events from the best Business School in Norway. I also value the personal atmosphere at NHH, especially within the Business, Economics and Data Science programme, where interaction with professors is encouraged. Compared with other institutions I have visited, such as Copenhagen Business School, I find this personal touch unique and something worth emphasising when representing NHH. As a Student Ambassador, I would strive to represent the Norwegian School of Economics with professionalism and enthusiasm, both on campus and abroad. I hope to help prospective students make informed decisions about their future, just as I once wished for guidance myself.

I expect from the role to present NHH all over the world and to make meaningful connections. I am confident that my creativity, intercultural competence, and strong communication skills as well as my desire to be a valuable member to society would allow me to make a meaningful contribution to the Ambassador Team. I would be honoured to join the Student Ambassador Team at the Norwegian School of Economics and to represent the school with dedication.

Yours sincerely,
Maxim Etienne Otto
